

Remove Shoes Before Entering

It may be an overstatement to say that our "New Look" home is the greatest restoration of ruins since the Parthenon of ancient Greece was rejuvenated, but quite a few of our friends have expressed that very opinion.

We have been taking them on personally conducted tours (every hour on the hour, admission free) in order that one and all can admire the newly-painted rooms, wall-to-wall carpeting and such innovations as new bathroom faucets which do not spray like a geyser when turned on, as the old ones did.

I guess this explains incidentally, why my husband keeps remarking he "feels like a stranger in his own home."

We have even opened up a portion of our home which had previously been blocked off from the viewing public. Our kids' sleeping quarters, until now, bore no more resemblance to a "Better Homes and Gardens" bedroom than the Black Hole of Calcutta.

I hope that the novelty of our modernization program doesn't wear off, because some of our kids have even taken to making their own beds. Without anybody in them.

Of course, a lot of people have asked if we've come into an inheritance. With all of these improvements we DO sort of resemble the plot of "Ma and Pa Kettle Strike It Rich." Unfortunately, the sequel would have to be "Ma and Pa Kettle Take Out an Improvement Loan."

You can readily see that these startling changes have brought about a new way of life around here. And it isn't too easy for our kids to adjust to the fact that they can no longer eat in the living room, nor prepare their peanut butter and jelly sandwiches there.

That's why we deemed it necessary to show the house off as quickly as possible before it returns to its old state, in about two weeks. Moreover, I don't know who is going to win the war of nerves in trying to keep the kids from applying their fingerprints to the walls like files in a police laboratory.

But perhaps we ARE a little too strict, especially in trying to keep our rugs intact. Maybe we should stop asking guests to remove their shoes before entering the living room.

Foreman Is Cited Upon Retirement

A Citation for Meritorious Achievement was bestowed upon Floyd W. Brown, 24815 S. Normandie Ave., Harbor City, by the Los Angeles Board of Public Works. He retired after 35 years of service with the department.

As sewer maintenance foreman in the board's Bureau of Sanitation, Brown has supervised the operation, maintenance and repair of the sanitary sewers and storm drains in the southern section of the city, including the Harbor area.

One of his major achievements, as recited by Norman B. Hume, director of the Bureau of Sanitation, was the rapid restoration of service of the sewer and storm drain system in the Baldwin Hills area after the disaster of Dec.

14, 1963, when the rupture of the Baldwin Hills Reservoir sent 300 million gallons flooding the district, destroying homes and streets and decommissioning the area's sewers and storm drains.

AUGUST 11, 1965 PRESS-HERALD B-7
ing the presentation ceremony, "through the efficient Director Hume informed the Board of Public Works during his crews."
